Dear CDAA colleagues

I would like to draw your immediate attention to this unique and exciting opportunity which has been announced this afternoon. The Department of Education Employment and Workplace Relations (DEEWR) will soon launch a new free national telephone-based professional career advisory service to address the needs of individuals who are transitioning into or within the workforce, especially those affected by the global financial crisis.

To staff the helpline, Salesforce@Home (on behalf of DEEWR) is seeking applications from qualified Career Advisors to provide services as self employed contractors working from home. Details about these opportunities are contained below. Please note the closing time for applications is 9am Wednesday July 8. I encourage you to consider the contribution you are able to make to this new national initiative and the people and communities it seeks to assist.

Best wishes

Carole Brown

National President

Applications Open for Career Advice Helpline

SalesForce@Home are seeking qualified Career Advisors to provide services as selfemployed contractors working from home on behalf of the Australian Government's newest initiative.

The Department of Education Employment and Workplace Relations (DEEWR) will be offering a new free national telephone-based professional career advisory service to address the needs of individuals who are transitioning into or within the workforce, especially those affected by the Global Financial Crisis. This service will strengthen and support the existing services available, providing solutions-focused advice and assistance specific to an individual's circumstances.

SalesForce@Home, one of Australia's most renowned contact centre providers, will engage professional Career Advisors to provide advice on behalf of DEEWR for the new advisory service.

Opportunities currently exist for qualified Career Advisors to work from their home or office and provide services to Salesforce as self-employed independent contractors. This is an ideal opportunity for Career Advisors across Australia who are currently looking for a flexible opportunity to choose the hours they work while making a difference and helping Australians.

If you are interested please click the link below for more information and to apply online through Salesforce@Home.
