Event: Career Management in Turbulent Times

24 February 2016

In a state economy, characterised by 13-year high unemployment rates, working hard is no longer sufficient career management.

In these volatile and uncertain times, the reality is that many people are either unemployed or nervously employed.

Founder and Principal of Executive Career Coaching, Barry Horne, will present a session on 'Career Management for the Nervously Employed' on Friday, March 18 at Nedlands Golf Club.

Event organiser and Career Development Association of Australia (CDAA) WA President, Dr Peter Carey, said this presentation is invaluable for employees across the workforce and those who provide career guidance to others.

"Particularly for those employed in - education, employment services, rehabilitation, outplacement and career development consultancies and human resources - this session is essential for guiding employees to effectively manage their careers in the current economy," Dr Carey said.

"This presentation will offer ideas on how individuals can actively manage their careers, by applying contingency planning approaches and moving beyond simple 'either/or' career thinking."
